You Can Help an Abortion Worker to Quit her Job!

Education: There are many different ways to work to prevent abortion. Pregnancy centers offer women information and support to choose life, and lobbying groups work to pass pro-life laws. But as long as abortion remains legal and the media support abortion as a woman's right, abortions continue to claim nearly a million lives a year in the U.S. The radicals who work to promote abortion, however, are not the ones actually doing the dirty work. It takes more than a doctor to run an abortion clinic. Without a receptionist, lab workers, and other helpers, it would be quite difficult to keep a clinic open.

And Then There Were None (ATTWN) is a non-profit dedicated to helping abortion workers leave the industry. Since its founding in 2012 by Abby Johnson, a former Planned Parenthood employee, ATTWN has helped over 400 workers to leave their jobs. These women often got involved simply because they needed a job. They may have at first been promised that they wouldn't have to be involved with abortion, but over time were required to take their turn in the lab. Many workers are post-abortive themselves and are bolstered by an environment that supports their past decision. But as time goes on, they may come to hate their jobs but feel trapped because they need to pay their bills. Many are single mothers. And so ATTWN helps them with transitional financing, help to find other employment, and emotional and spiritual support. Healing retreats are also offered for the former abortion workers.

Prayer: Please, Lord, have mercy on women who have taken a job in the abortion industry. Please also help the doctors who have become desensitized to the reality of abortion. Help everyone in the abortion industry to accept the truth that abortion is wrong and have the courage to cease their involvement. Help them to find support and healing as well as Your forgiveness and unconditional love. Bless the efforts of And Then There Were None, and help the support they offer to be known to every abortion worker. Help everyone involved with abortion find forgiveness and healing, and let respect for life continue to gain ground in our country until abortion is recognized by all to be wrong.

Action: Pray that more and more abortion workers will leave the industry, as well as for the conversion of the doctors themselves. The ATTWN website, www.abortionworker.com, has printable flyers that you can mail to the abortion clinics near you. For a list of local clinics, click here (or go to the CVL web site/information-resources page). You can also contribute to ATTWN to support the billboard ad they have placed near the big Planned Parenthood at 4600 Gulf Freeway in Houston, or to support their work in general.
